

41. Fox Hill

The few houses at the Fox Hill settlement have shown little change in the past century. This region is one of the most isolated and lonely places in the Adirondacks. Except for the cutting of firewood in the depleted forest of the region, the main resource is water which is gathered in several small lakes to supply water for Amsterdam.

